

PROJECT HUMANITY FIRST

Based on a simple paradigm shift in national flag protocols, Project Humanity First champions Human Rights by promoting the importance, value, and quality of life as paramount in civic and government policy.

This action can be carried out by simply placing the Human Rights flag (Predrag Stakić design, 2010, or Ai Weiwei design, 2018) in a position of priority for a personal, civic, or political event.

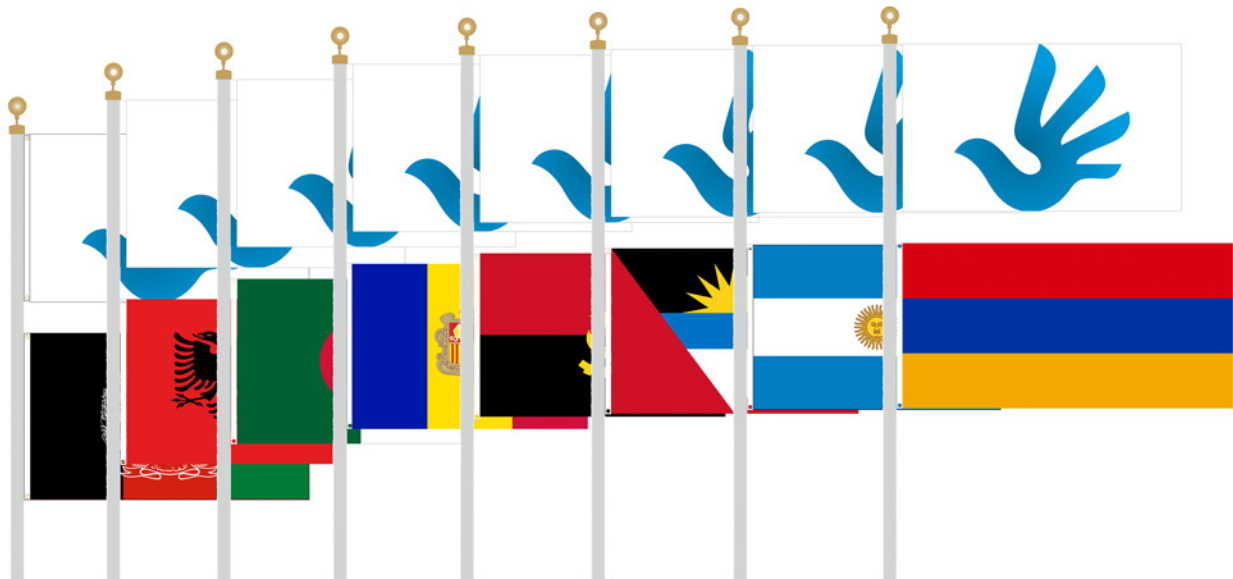

A public reading of the Declaration of Human Rights can form part of the event as well as within community discussions.

STUDIO DAVIS BIRKS

The actions and public installations with the Human Rights Flag positioned over a single national flag provide a platform for public discussion on the government's leadership concerning Human Rights issues.

The actions and installations incorporating many or all national flags demonstrate the breadth of Humanity beyond borders, focused on the value, dignity, and quality of human life worldwide.

The goal of Project Humanity First is to foster and solidify the concept of governments at the service of their people.

If we consider the fundamental purpose of government is to represent, serve, protect, and promote the quality of life for its citizens, it is clear that Human Rights should be THE most important PRIORITY in civic action and government legislation.

The implementation of Project Humanity First champions the basic democratic ideology of governments of the people, by the people, for the people.
